

Would-be MP in flood talks with PM

THE prospective Conservative MP for Yeovil has discussed the district's future after the flood waters recede with the Prime Minister.

Conservative county councillor, Marcus Fysh, met David Cameron during his visit to Gold and Silver Commanders of the flood relief effort.

They talked about how tourism bookings have suffered, building resilience and the importance of dualling the A303, which links the South-West and London.

Mr Cameron said: "Robust links for the South West are essential so that this beautiful area remains open for business and reaches its full potential as part of our long term economic plan for people's prosperity."

Mr Fysh said: "I am grateful to the Prime Minister for the chance to discuss some of the issues that are important to us here as we move from relief to recovery and are thinking about the future.

"There's more to do, but it's great
